Write to Ocean Publishing Co. quired to maintain a tenacious piston seal and provide ample lubrication of the parts. Practice has proven that one or two drops of this oil per minute is entirely sufficient in the cylinders of marine air compressor. The mechanical force-feed lubricator is the ideal method of applying oil to the cylinders of fair compressors. The oil should flow directly through the cylinder wall by means of two leads, opposite each other, to the piston, between the first and second piston rings, when the piston is at the bottom of its stroke (referring to a vertical compressor). On the up stroke the oil is spread over the surface, forms the piston seal, and lubricates the moving parts. In three-stage compressors, it has been found sufficient to feed oil to the low and high pressure cylinders, in the same way as before referred to, and not any to the intermediate cylinder, for it receives some of the oil from the low pressure cylinder. Speaking in general, too much oil is fed to the cylinders of air compressors rather than too little. It has been found that air compressor cylinders require but one-tenth the quantity of oil per unit of time that the cylinders of steam engines require, all else being equal. Troubles In correct lubrication, either with the lubricant itself or in the...
