Wahlbom. 1746. Whoever would see all the arguments for, and the result of, those experiments, on which the doctrine of the sexes of plants is founded, are referred to this dissertation; as containing, by far, the most clear, comprehensive, and yet copious view of that subject. It is professedly a commentary upon the 5th chapter of Linnus's Fundaments or Philosophia Botanica, from section 132 to 150 inclusive, and contains 49 pages. It is out of our plan to produce any detail of these arguments; suffice it to say, that although, from the writings of Theophrastus and Pliny, we learn that the ancients had some idea of an analogy in this respect, between the animal and vegetable kingdom, drawn perhaps principally from the artificial mode of founding the date-tree, yet, so crude and erroneous were their ideas, that in many instances they called those plants male or female, which modern discoveries have taught us are exactly the reverse. Indeed it does not appear, that any very precise ideas on this subject were established till late in the last century; and, were it a matter of importance to determine to whom applause is due for this discovery, the English might perhaps with justice claim this honour, and bestow it on Sr Thomas Millington, Savilian professor, who appears to have been the first that gave the hint to Dr. Grew; since whose time this doctrine has received so much light, that...
