We finished our loading, with some necessary clothes; and guns, pistols, and swords, to defend ourselves from wild beasts, and if we required it, to kill them for food. I gave orders for the rope to be let go: the next few moments were those of anxious silence--should we be blown towards the creek, or would some current take us out to sea? This was an awful question, as we could but have expected to linger out a few days of miserable existence in such a craft at sea. She has caught the wind, said Jack. John Niger (the black) shook his head in a satisfactory manner, saying, Dis draft bery fine ship massa. Presently he thought of his son Barnabas, whom...
